A Memorable Visit to the Post Office

by David M. Frye

One day in the midst of the summer of 1973, my parents loaded by brothers and me into our family station wagon and took us on a day-long road trip from Lebanon, Pa., north to Snyder County to visit several of Dad's relatives.

My most vivid memories are tied to a woman we called Aunt Mildred. She was my paternal grandmother's aunt, so she was really my Great-great-aunt Mildred. But that's not what we called her.

She lived in Middle Creek, Pa. She was a postmistress and owner of a general store. I had gotten started in stamp collecting several years earlier, so the idea of spending some time at a post office was exciting to me.

Her post office was unlike any of the ones I had visited in my hometown. It was tucked into the front corner of her general store, to the left when you came through the screen door from the store's front porch. The store itself was on one side of the building, and Aunt Mildred's house was on the other side.

The post office had lots of little mail boxes and a window I could stand up to on my tiptoes to look through to see where Aunt Mildred worked when she was sorting the mail.

This example of the Post Rider stamp from the Middle Creek Post Office shows misregistration of the green and black inks, with the green shifted to the left. The printing of the Bicentennial star logo also has deposited some ink above and to the left of the logo.

She gave me her copy of the souvenir page for the eight-cent Post Rider issue in the American Bicentennial Issue: Rise of the Spirit of Independence Series and sold me one of the stamps to put on the page. It is one of the items in my collection that I treasure, not because it is rare, but because Aunt Mildred had given it to me.

Like any normal boy, I was interested in looking at the candy and dry goods in her store, and I loved that she cut some ring bologna from her supply in the store and carried it through the door to her kitchen to make lunch for us. But the best memory was of my visit to Aunt Mildred's Middle Creek Post Office.
