A Nearly Forgotten Centennial: The Parcel Post, 1913–2013

Office of the Inspector General Unveils “100 Years of Parcel Post”

by David M. Frye

Every now and then, a Web search will unearth a surprise, a gem, a treat one had no reason to anticipate. I’ve forgotten how I stumbled upon it, but a few weeks ago I ran across the Web site of the Office of the Inspector General for the USPS.

That, in itself, may not sound like much of a great find, but even so, there it was, on the second page of a list of recently posted documents. Hidden among other offerings like “Self-Service Kiosks” and “Towards A Postal Service Intellectual Property Strategy” was the gem—“100 Years of Parcel Post.”

The paper’s highlights make clear the reason for the paper is not simply to mark a centennial. The highlights’ summary begins by noting: When Parcel Post came to America in 1913, it was a deliberate government effort to inject competition into the parcel delivery market.

Parcel Post was an immediate success and transformed the commercial marketplace, particularly rural areas (p. 2).

Presenting an overview of the history of parcel delivery before Parcel Post, the paper observes that pre-1913 federal law did not allow the Post Office Department to deliver parcels domestically, only overseas. The advent of Rural Free Delivery yielded an insight:

When RFD introduced daily mail wagons to rural areas, some carriers began to pick up and deliver packages from railway depots on their own initiative and for a fee, suggesting an unexploited business opportunity (p. 5).

Just as in today’s national discourse, the politics of mail delivery was an issue. Twenty-two years after Postmaster General John Wanamaker floated the first proposal for the POD to deliver parcels domestically, a measure finally passed the requisite votes in Congress.

The paper then surveys the current climate for package delivery, before ending with some suggestions for the future of those services. The report highlights the existence of the Postal Service’s extensive network of post offices and its continuing commitment to deliver to every address in the whole country. What happens with the Postal Service remains to be seen as the debates unfold in Congress.

The report is well worth your time and may give you some insights into some of your back-of-the-book stamps and covers.

Club Membership

Lincoln Stamp Club Offers Collectors of All Types a Variety of Benefits

The Lincoln Stamp Club, celebrating its fiftieth year in 2014, offers collectors diverse benefits and opportunities.

First of all, the Club meets twice monthly. The first meeting, held on the first Thursday of the month, features an exchange. This event offers a variety of philatelic items for sale. Sometimes these items come from donations to the Club and other times, individual members will sell items from their own holdings. You can see a typical list of exchange items on p. 2 of this newsletter. The other part of this meeting is the business meeting, which also includes time for members to share intriguing items from their collections and to pass on local and national stamp-collecting news.

The second meeting of the month, held on the third Thursday, is focused on a program. Members, guests, and the occasional multimedia offering provide entertaining and educational presentations on topics that vary as much as our members' interests. The current and upcoming programs are listed on p. 4.

You're holding another one of the Club's benefits in your hands (or looking at it on your screen): The Souvenir Sheet, our monthly newsletter. Printed in full color, it is mailed to members' homes around the first of the month.

Another communications benefit is our Web site, www.lincolnstampclub.org. It contains news about meetings, a repository of newsletters going back to 2010, informative links to other stamp-collecting resources on the Web, and updates on our stamp show.

LINPEX, our stamp show, is the last major benefit we offer our members. Of course, the public is invited, but members have the chance to become involved in planning and carrying out an event that helps to educate the general public about stamp collecting.

All of this for only $12 per year. Find out more: questions@www.lincolnstampclub.org
